E.J. Krause & Associates is pleased to announce it is co-organizing Beijing International Emergency Rescue Expo (ERE China), with Norinco, a well-established Chinese enterprise. This will be the 3rd edition of the event, displaying state of the art technology and products for emergency rescue and disaster mitigation.

Natural and man-made disasters have been posing catastrophic effects, hindering the development, affecting people's livelihood and social stability in China. Five of the world's worst natural disasters have occurred in China. ERE China 2013 focuses on advancing the development of the Chinese emergency rescue industry. The event is designed specifically to provide an effective and professional platform for government departments and professionals to enhance their technical knowledge and acquire the necessary emergency equipment, while gaining the managerial expertise in handling various man-made and natural disasters.

China, because of its sheer size, geography and population, experiences a plethora of man-made and natural disasters including deadly earthquakes, typhoons, major floods, fires and droughts. These disasters impact the lives of hundreds of millions of people annually. China is one of the best markets in the world for companies that have products or services for planning, prevention, mitigation and recovery of these disasters. ERE China 2013 will offer key procurement opportunities for providing technology, products, services and solutions for China's national and regional government emergency management.
